The sessions strongly establish the Community-based preparedness and early warning systems help in saving lives, protecting property, and reducing economic losses. Failure to understand the risk behaviour and culture of local communities can lead to badly designed preparedness measures including early warning systems. Local people's participation ensures self-reliance and ensures that emergency management plans meet local needs. Indigenous knowledge and innovation concerning hazards and mitigation also play an important role. Apart from this observation, following are the key points 1. Improved Institutional and technical capacity of priority districts on disaster risk reduction and management; 2. Enhanced Capacity of target communes for disaster risk reduction and management; 3.
